Read the following passage carefully.

Pamela and John went to London with their parents. They set out early and caught a train to Charing Cross at eight O'clock.

They arrived just before nine. Leaving the station, from which they had a good view of Nelson's Column, they walked down Whitehall to Westminster. After hearing Big Ben strike a quarter past the hour, they went into Westminster Abbey. There they saw the tombs of kings, queens, and many other famous people. Then, it was a Saturday, they were able to go into the Houses of Parliament. That was very interesting, and the children were amazed by the richness and splendour of the House of Lords.

After that, they returned to Whitehall, where John wanted to take a photograph of the Life Guards. He was very impressed by the Guards.
